Round Shoulders

BY LILLIAN RUSSELL.

(Copyright, 1915, by Lillian Russell.)

Round shoulders are indicative of a sluggish health or character. They may arouse pity and perhaps sympathy, but never admiration. No body who has any strength of character welcomes pity, even when sympathy is acceptable.

Even when girls and boys, who are governed by a passing fancy, drop into a negligent and careless attitude round shoulders detract from their appearance.

It is really impossible to assume a proper posture and pose when the shoulders are thrown out of their natural position.

There is a sort of languid grace that some women can successfully exhibit under certain conditions, but they are adepts at posing. These women never permit their bearing to even suggest round shoulders.

Of course if a person is in ill health it takes a special effort to sit and stand erect. Sluggishness is the enemy of beauty, and this especially applies to those ailments which sap the strength and leave the body void of vigor, natural to health. It can be readily understood that those people who hold their shoulders properly while enjoying good health will have less difficulty in doing the same while ill than those who are accustomed to slouching.

Drooping shoulders distort at least one-half of the body. When the shoulders fall out of place, so do the shoulder bones and blades. The abdomen and waist line are affected to a noticeable degree. It is really not necessary to mention the ill effects of round shoulders. You will see them about you.

"Fortunately it is natural for people to brighten up when they are before a mirror. They assume their best expression and pose. They reflect their best; that is the reason why so many are unaware of their own deformities. They do not always see themselves as others see them.

If you will stand before a mirror with your shoulders rounded and drop into a slumped position, think of a few disagreeable and unpleasant things, regarding yourself in the mirror at the same time, make even a brief summary of the ill effects, you will find excellent reasons for sitting and standing erect and guarding your facial expression.

If either your health or your character is so sluggish that your shoulders become stooped, you are in need of exercise and pure air, and possibly a change of diet. There is no condition of facial and bodily formation that cannot be improved by exercise and diet. Of course, there are some people whose physical condition will not permit exercise, but these are few in number.

The general run of round-shouldered people come by their deformity (it really is a deformity) through neglect or laziness. The exercises that will straighten the figure will, at the same time, strengthen the character and add to the health.

Remember: It is inconsistent to pity or sympathize with the person whose spine is crooked and then go about with your own shoulders hunched.

Lillian Russell's Answer. Excessive perspiration comes from disordered action of the sweat glands, and usually accompanies rheumatism, gout and diseases of the nervous system. It also indicates a run-down condition. A good tonic often is helpful. Mild cases are benefited by bathing the affected parts in water as hot as can be borne. A strong solution of common baking soda and hot water is also helpful. Another wash is one or two drams of alum, dissolved in a pint of alcohol. After bathing the affected surface, apply dust with plain boric talcum powder.

B. D.: I do not recommend the use of paste or dyes of any kind for the hair, if you insist upon using it, however, I suggest your consulting a reliable hair dresser.

M. E. H.: It is slow work to reduce the bust. Any vigorous exercise that involves the muscles of the chest will help reduce the bust. Boxing and fencing are beneficial. Exercises with chest weights also are good. Overeating is harmful, not helpful. If you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope I shall be happy to send you instructions for reducing the bust.

Mrs. R.: The following lotion is good for removing corns: Twenty grains salicylic acid, one ounce flexible collodion, and one-eighth ounce alcohol. Apply to the hard surface of the corn with a small brush, being careful that you do not get any of the surrounding skin. Apply for three nights, then soak the corn in hot water, when a layer of skin will come off. Repeat until the corn has disappeared.

Margaret: Egg shampoos are good for the hair. Beat a couple of eggs over the head and rub them well into the hair, then wash the hair and rinse thoroughly.

Dr. Brady's Health Talk

Sprains and Strains.

In romantic fiction a sprained ankle is a useful device. It enables the author to bring things to a climax. The hero gets in his manly way, and the heroine gets a chance to show her fine endurance. She faints and he nurses her tenderly.

In real life a sprain has no redeeming features. The heroine doesn't display any great endurance—on the contrary, she seems a very peevish, impatient creature. And the hero just exhibits a remarkable capacity for criticizing the doctor's treatment of the case.

And in real life the doctor, instead of rushing in and acting like a clown and putting folks on an uncertain way, examines the ankle and wonders, privately and under his breath, what really is the matter. Is it just a wrench of the joint? Is it a fracture? He never feels thoroughly satisfied at first sight.

A sprain is somewhat more serious than a fracture. More damage to the soft tissues may accompany a sprain than you ordinarily see in the case of a fracture. More permanent disability or weakness may follow the sprain than is usual after a fracture. Many apparent sprains are in reality fractures of some part of the ankle or foot. But we will assume you have just sprained your ankle. What should be done?

Should You Rest or Use the Limb? A sprain is a tearing or rupture of ligaments. They bleed. The skin is not broken, yet there is practically a wound. The first thing to be done, therefore, is to put the part at rest. Just as though you had a broken bone. Splint the ankle. This may be done by any available means. A folded newspaper, wet and bound snugly about the ankle and leg outside of the stocking, resting the ankle in a trough made in a bag of grain or salt or beans or sand; simply lying it snugly in a high-topped boot; or, if possible, strapping it with adhesive plaster, or placing it in a plaster of Paris cast.

If swelling is rapid and pain great, the ankle and leg should be immersed in a very hot bath, a trifle hotter than the patient can bear. The water must be kept a trifle too hot, by dipping out and dipping in. In half an hour or an hour of this will usually control the pain and stop the swelling. Then some suitable support or splint should be applied.

Any sprain is helped by intelligent massage. Begin with very gentle strokes from above the ankle toward the knee, and gradually go lower and lower, increasing the pressure, until the whole swollen ankle is freely massaged. Massage is for the purpose of aiding the lymph vessels and the veins to carry away exuded lymph and congested blood. Hence it must begin above the sprain and be applied only toward the heart.

Questions and Answers. Heart O. K.—Eighteen-year-old boy writes that his heart beats every second. Reply—May it continue to do so for 100 years.

Gastric Ulcer.—Our family physician has diagnosed "ulcer of the stomach." In one of the family, and prescribes an exclusive diet of milk for three months. Do you believe that a satisfactory diet?

Bread and Water.—I, alas, have a tendency to cause constipation. I wouldn't graham or whole wheat bread be better for members of the exclusive diet of milk? 3. How much water should a healthy person drink each day?

Reply—1. Yes. 2. Only as a second choice. 3. Two quarts.

Anesthetic and Heart.—Can a person whose heart is weak stand an anesthetic? He plays baseball, and his heart doesn't bother him while playing. He makes it his habit to have nothing wrong with his heart at all.

Neatsfoot Oil.—What is Neatsfoot oil, and what is it used for? Reply—Oil obtained by boiling the feet of an ox, minus the hoofs. It is used to soften leather, grease machinery, etc. Sometimes it is given internally as a substitute for cod liver oil, or as a mild laxative. It is clear, yellowish, bland in taste.

Unprintable.—Many correspondents suggest that we omit their questions, but print the answers alone. However, the answer is apt to be even more frank than the question, so we suggest that you stamp, addressed envelope would be the solution of this embarrassing problem.

Taking Quinine.—How about a child always taking quinine for a cold? Is it not a bad plan? Reply—A very bad plan, indeed. The child ought not to have a "cold" so often. The first place. And the quinine will presently destroy his natural resistance. If it doesn't affect his hearing.

PRESIDENT OF SOUTHERN HONORED BY ACCOUNTANTS

WASHINGTON, January 3.—Nearly 1,000 employees of the accounting department of the Southern Railway have presented to Fairfax Harrison, president of the company, an engrossed scroll, personally signed by each of them, wishing him "good health and happiness," as a New Year sentiment.

The scroll, which came to Mr. Harrison as a surprise, was the result of a reply to a Christmas message of greeting he sent the employees December 24. In it the employees say: "If our aid, through efficient and co-operative service, will insure your success, it would be idle to wish, for the interests you represent, a Prosperous New Year. We feel that success is assured."

The testimonial was presented to Mr. Harrison by a committee of the employees. To them he paid a high tribute in accepting the greeting, praising the loyalty and efficiency of the men and women whose support and co-operation, he said, was necessary to insure the company's continued success.

The committee was made up as follows: M. E. Martin, chairman, representing the auditor of freight accounts department; J. Acheson, representing the assistant controller's department; Vincent Smith, representing the department of the assistant to the controller; William Luckett, representing the auditor's department; G. Lewis, representing the department of the auditor of revenue; Edward Turner, representing the auditor of passenger accounts department; Frank Pollard, representing the auditor of disbursements department; Charles Burroughs, representing the auditor of station accounts department; and W. H. Burman, representing the freight claim department.

In each of these departments many extraordinary values will go on sale values that the thrifty housewife cannot afford to miss. If she is interested in substantial savings on her purchases—

BOTH FRIENDS AND FOES OF SUFFRAGE AT WORK

Vigorous Lobbies Hope to Dispose of Suffrage Amendment by Congress.

WASHINGTON, January 3.—With a test vote promised on the constitutional amendment for woman suffrage next week in the House, the forces working for suffrage and those working against the cause are maintaining as vigorous lobbies as ever worked on Congress.

Chairman Henry of the House Rules Committee has promised that he will call up the special rule for the consideration of the Mondell resolution to submit the woman suffrage amendment to the States for ratification, January 12, calling for an immediate vote thereon.

Miss Alice Paul, executive chairman of the Congressional Union for Woman Suffrage, the chief suffrage body in the fight, let it be known that the union has gathered a campaign fund of more than $55,000 to be used in pushing the amendment through the House. The last thousand was subscribed only the other day by Mrs. O. H. Belmont, who has been giving $1,000 a month to the cause for more than a year.

Mrs. William Kent, wife of the representative from California, Mrs. Gibson Gardner and other prominent suffragists have been spending hours every day at the Capitol interviewing members.

The anti-suffrage forces have been equally as active, though attracting less public attention. They have delivered to every member of the House much literature protesting against the amendment.

One statement says in part: "The method proposed of placing political burdens upon the women of the country by a constitutional amendment alone, without securing approval from the women themselves, is unfair, undemocratic and un-American."

"The overwhelming majority of women do not want the ballot. They prefer to be represented in politics by the men—their husbands, fathers, brothers and sons."

"Men and women are different by nature and have different functions to perform—woman, the bearing and rearing of children and the dominion of the home; man, the support, the defense and protection thereof, and to his domain, being politics and political controversies, which include the ballot."

Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch and Miss Florence King are to head a delegation of suffragists coming on a special train from New York City a day before the suffrage debate in the House. Several special trains are to be run from New York and other cities.

CRAFT IN PERIL SAVED BY THE CUTTER ITASCA

Abandoned Schooner, Lumber Laden, Is Christmas Gift to Her Owners.

WASHINGTON, January 3.—To the cutter Itasca, doing duty under the command of Captain Chiswell on the Norfolk Station, belongs the credit of having first vessel of the service this season to bring in an abandoned vessel for the owners. About ten days ago the three-masted schooner Warren Adams, bound from Charleston to Philadelphia, with lumber, was caught in a heavy gale off the Virginia coast and was soon dismasted and waterlogged, her cargo of dry lumber kept her afloat. A passing steamer took off the crew and carried them to New York.

Report was made of the abandoned vessel in the path of shipping, and the Itasca started in search of the wreck and was fortunate in quickly locating it. The cutter, on taking on line on the bulk of water and towing her to Hampton Roads was a difficult task, but was finally accomplished and the schooner will be turned over to her owners. The vessel was insured and, according to report, represents the sole wealth of three owners at Jacksonville, Fla. The saving of the craft was a fine Christmas present for them.

Save New Year From Drowning. A report received from First Lieutenant Leon C. Covell, of this city, commanding the cutter Snohomish, on duty on New Bay, Washington, credits Third Lieutenant F. A. Zechenschuler of the Snohomish with having saved a man from drowning at Seattle. Lieutenant Zechenschuler was on a wharf waiting for a boat to take him aboard his ship when he heard a noise under the wharf and a call for help was heard. He jumped into a boat and paddled out, and the man, who was struggling to keep afloat, was dragged into the boat. Seeing that he was almost dead, Lieutenant Zechenschuler endeavored to paddle to the Snohomish, lying some distance away. Owing to winds and cross currents, he was making but slow progress when he was observed from the cutter, and a boat was sent to his aid. The man, who gave his name as J. E. Hobson, of Garibaldi, Wash., was taken care of aboard the cutter until he was strong enough to go ashore. But for the efforts of Lieutenant Zechenschuler he would surely have been drowned.
